WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

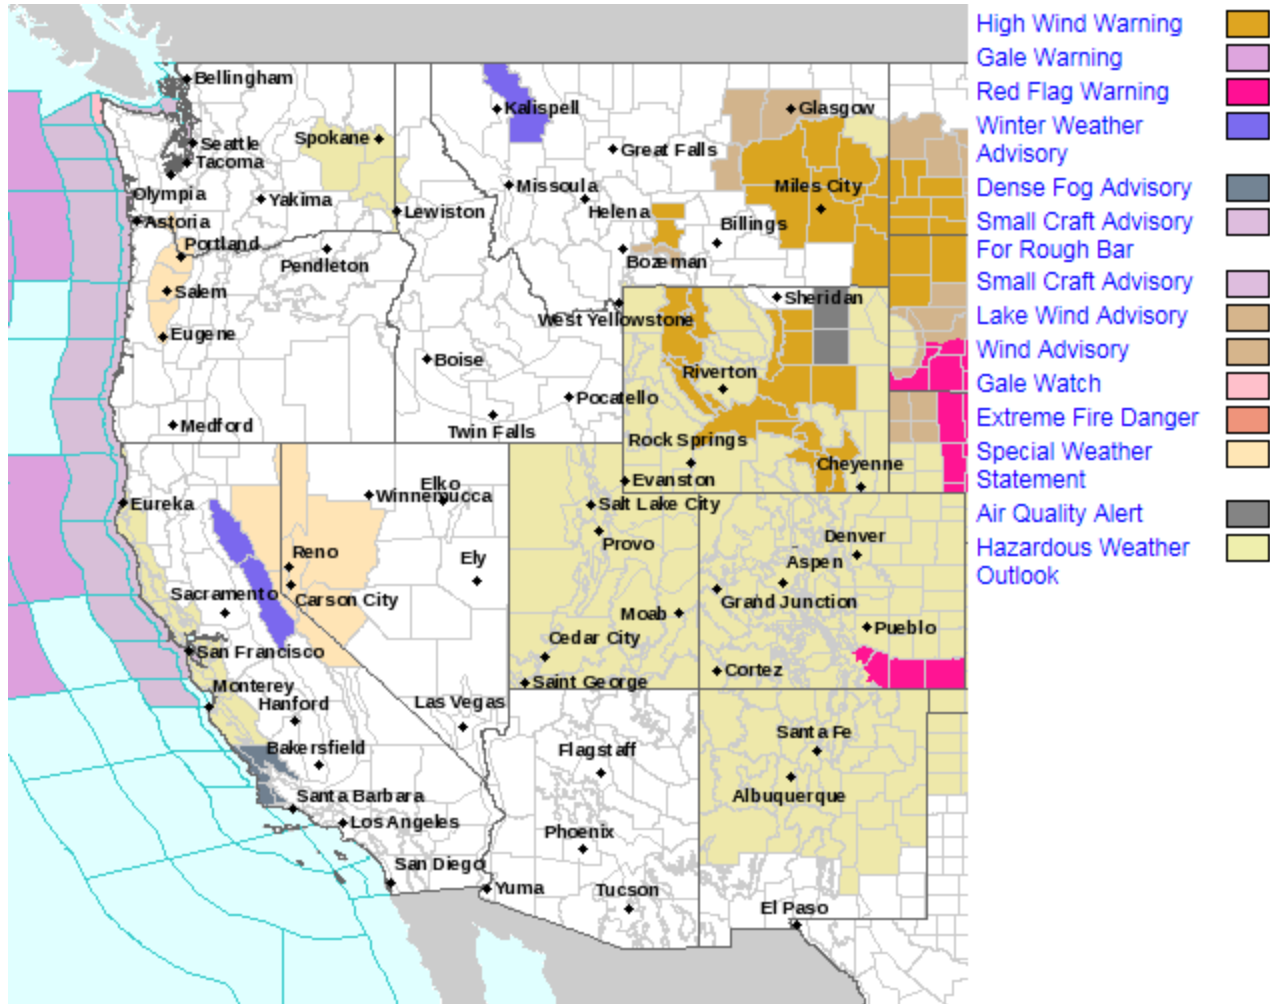

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rain and high elevation snow today as a Pacific frontal system moves across Northern California. Gusty winds will accompany the front with a chance of thunderstorms northern Sacramento valley and foothills. Showers continuing at times early this week with warming and drying towards the end of the week. A chance of rain again next weekend but remaining north of about Chico.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A Pacific storm moving into Northern California will bring scattered showers away from the deserts with most locations expected to receive less than a quarter inch of rainfall. A weaker storm will move into Northern California bringing a few showers from a Monterey/Fresno County line northward this afternoon through Tuesday morning. Westerly winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the wind prone areas tonight through Tuesday afternoon. Maximum temperatures will be in the upper 40s and 50s across the mountains and 60s to low 70s in the valleys through Tuesday. A strong ridge of high pressure will build into California from the Pacific Ocean bringing a significant warming trend Wednesday through Friday. Temperatures will approach 90 degrees over the warmer valley locations of Southern California by Friday. This ridge of high pressure will also cause widespread minimum humidity to fall into the single digits and teens Wednesday through Friday. There will be northeast to east winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Tuesday night through Friday morning.
